Re: Review of Retail Strategy

I would like it to be made known that I fully support the idea of bringing a new chain supermarket to the island, as proposed in the ad in the JEP recently. I am a local person but have lived in England for seven years on and off and have now settled back home, here in Jersey. I believe Jersey has so many good points and I value living here greatly. The only real disadvantage is the lack of a good substantial supermarket. There is very little choice for the consumer and costs are very high. I appreciate others arguments against this but I feel the benefits far outweigh the negatives. The likes of Tesco are excellent in my mind, they have such a variety of foods, represent all tastes and budgets and have so much under one roof. I would love Tesco to open a store here, but failing that I would still fully support the likes of Asda, Sainsburys etc. It would make the island complete.
