

Hi Louise about the new charge for nursery places. I'm totally gutted as it could mean the difference between me keeping my career going or not - it will be hard to justify it being worth me carrying on working if we are going to have to pay more for childcare than we do now. I worry that Evie won't be able to go to pre-school due to money and that she will miss out on such an important part of her learning and socialization journey by starting cold into reception. It seems like the government will do everything to prevent women (and indeed men) who are parents and have loads to contribute to society and the economy returning to work after having a family as there is absolutely zero incentive to do so which again is such a shame as lots of us have so much to give.
