REPORT

During the States' debate in November 2004 on the Draft States of Jersey Law 200- (P.124/2004), the President of the Policy and Resources Committee undertook to report back to the Assembly within 3 months on the following –

- the eligibility for election of public sector employees; and
- the arrangements for the appointment of ministers.

In relation to the eligibility for election of public sector employees, the Policy and Resources Committee has given further consideration to this matter and will shortly be presenting an R.C. to the States which will set out a proposed way forward.

The proposed revised arrangements for the appointment of ministers are set out in this amending law. It will be recalled that Article 19 of the States of Jersey Law, as adopted by the States in November 2004, provides for the Chief Minister designate to nominate his or her ministerial team en bloc and for the States to accept or reject the team as a whole. Under the proposed amendment, the Chief Minister designate will nominate candidates individually for appointment to specific Ministerial office, and the States will be asked to vote on each nomination separately. In the event that the Chief Minister designate's nominations for a particular Ministerial office should be rejected by the States, on a number of occasions to be specified in standing orders, the Chief Minister designate would cease to be such and the process of selecting a Chief Minister and ministers would recommence.

The Policy and Resources Committee believes that this change will provide for greater transparency, as States members will be able to express their preferences in relation to each candidate and their suitability for the office for which they have been proposed. A further benefit of this arrangement is that a majority vote will be required to elect each of the candidates as a minister, and the successful candidates will therefore know that they have the confidence of the majority of members.

The Committee also recommends that provision should be made in Standing Orders for the Chief Minister designate to present a list of his or her proposed candidates, together with their proposed Ministerial offices, at the beginning of the nomination process. In this way, States members will be able to vote on each candidate in the knowledge of who is being proposed for all the Ministerial offices. In the event of one or more of his or her candidates not being accepted by the States, the Chief Minister designate would need to present a revised list of candidates for the information of members. It is suggested that the Chief Minister designate should be able to make up to three nominations for each Ministerial office and, as noted above, this would also need to be provided for in Standing Orders. Subject to any views that members might wish to express during the States' debate on this amending law, it is suggested that the Privileges and Procedures Committee should be requested to include these provisions in the work that they are currently undertaking on Standing Orders.

Finally, the Committee has also considered the question of whether the Chief Minister designate should be able to propose during the nomination process that he or she should take on an additional Ministerial office. The States of Jersey Law, as adopted by the States in November 2004, allows for the Chief Minister designate to be assigned an additional Ministerial office, but on reflection the Committee believes that such a provision is undesirable. Firstly, the Chief Minister will have a varied and demanding role, and it therefore seems unlikely that he or she will be in a position to take on the additional responsibility. Secondly, there may be concerns about too much authority being concentrated in one individual, particularly as this person will already be exercising the responsibilities of Chief Minister. The Committee is accordingly proposing in the amending law that the ability of the Chief Minister designate to take on additional responsibility should be removed. Article 28 of the States of Jersey Law would still provide the flexibility to expand the Chief Minister's portfolio, by transferring functions between Ministers by Regulations, but this would require the approval of the States.

This Draft Law has no implications for the financial or manpower resources of the States.

European Convention on Human Rights

Article 16 of the Human Rights (Jersey) Law 2000 will, when brought into force by Act of the States, require the Committee in charge of a Projet de Loi to make a statement about the compatibility of the provisions of the Projet with the Convention rights (as defined by Article 1 of the Law). Although the Human Rights (Jersey) Law 2000 is not yet in force, on 3rd February 2005 the Policy and Resources Committee made the following statement before Second Reading of this projet in the States Assembly –

In the view of the Policy and Resources Committee the provisions of the Draft States of Jersey (Amendment) Law 200- are compatible with the Convention Rights.

Explanatory Note

Article 1 is the interpretation provision.

Article 2 amends Article 19 of the States of Jersey Law 200-, which sets out the process for selection and appointment of the Council of Ministers.

The States of Jersey Law 200-, as adopted, provides for the Chief Minister designate to nominate and propose his or her ministerial team en bloc and for the States to accept or reject the team as a whole. In the event that the team as a whole was rejected by the States on a number of occasions which would be prescribed in standing orders, the Chief Minister designate would cease to be such and the process for selecting a Chief Minister would recommence.

This amending Law would have the effect that the Chief Minister designate would propose each of his or her nominations for assignment to a Ministerial office in turn, and the States would vote on each nomination separately. In the event that, on a number of occasions to be prescribed in standing orders, the States rejected the Chief Minister designate's nominations for assignment to a specific Ministerial office, the Chief Minister designate would, as before, cease to be such and the process for selecting a Chief Minister would recommence.

This amending Law would also enable the Chief Minister designate to stand down before the process for selection of the 9 Ministers has been completed. In that event, the process for selecting a Chief Minister, again, recommences.

Finally, this amending Law removes the ability for the Chief Minister designate to propose that, in addition to the rôle of Chief Minister, he or she should take on an additional Ministerial office. Were it to be the case that the Chief Minister wished to expand his or her own portfolio, this may still be done under Article 28 of the States of Jersey Law 200-, with the agreement of the States, by transferring functions between Ministers by Regulations.

Article 3 is the citation and commencement provision.
