DRAFT GAMBLING (JERSEY) LAW 201-

European Convention on Human Rights

In accordance with the provisions of Article 16 of the Human Rights (Jersey) Law 2000 the Chief Minister, for and on behalf of the Minister for Economic Development, has made the following statement –

In the view of the Chief Minister, for and on behalf of the Minister for Economic Development, the provisions of the Draft Gambling (Jersey) Law 201- are compatible with the Convention Rights.

(Signed) Senator T.A. Le Sueur

REPORT

Introduction

The States has been asked to consider a modernisation programme for gambling over the past 3 years and has given clear and consistent support for updating the Island's regulatory system, as well as broad modernisation of the industry. Specifically the States supported the creation of the Jersey Gambling Commission (JGC), the adoption of internet gaming Regulations and the reform of the gaming machine Regulations.

The JGC is now well-established and has been working with departmental officials to conclude the modernisation programme with the delivery of a new gambling Law. This draft Law is the culmination of that work and it will provide the Island, if adopted, with a modern, proportionate and effective system of regulation. Importantly, the Law builds on the system already approved by the States of regulation through licensing conditions and codes of practice. This will ensure that the system of regulation available to the JGC is capable of evolution and change at a pace commensurate with modern business practices. Importantly, it also brings the checks and balances available to the Commission into the modern age, with licensees subject to administrative fines for non-compliance and increased criminal penalties for non-licensed activities.

It is important to note that this draft Law will allow the JGC to deliver on its own statutory requirement not to impose unnecessary burdens on industry, as well as moving to a risk-based system that will reduce the level of bureaucracy faced by the social and charitable sector. It is also consistent with the Minister's policy on gambling that he published in October 2009. All licensed gambling will therefore –

- be regulated in accordance with generally accepted international standards to prevent fraud and money laundering, and should not be permitted to be a source of crime;
- be verifiably fair to consumers of those services;
- be conducted responsibly and with safeguards necessary to protect children and vulnerable people.

The 1964 Law

Before considering this draft Law in depth, it is important to recall what it is aiming to replace. The Gambling (Jersey) Law 1964 was a product of its time insofar as it considers gambling to be morally questionable, it criminalises everything and it has fossilised the industry and charitable sector by subjecting them to highly detailed and inflexible regulations. As its core provision, Article 2 holds that all gambling is illegal unless made legal by regulation. This means that anyone involved in gambling, whether playing cards privately at home, using the services of a licensed betting office, or supporting a charitable tombola, are all treated fundamentally the same. While the Regulations allowing certain types of gambling differ, they all make prevention and control more important than supervision and effective enforcement, and criminal penalties apply equally to those facilitating gambling by way of a business, as well as the customer using gambling services in good faith.

These are serious flaws. All types of gambling should not be treated the same, and the regulation of what has become a technologically dynamic industry has been hampered because amongst other things, the States' increasing workload prevents amendments being made in a reasonable timeframe. The Minister does not believe that the 1964 Law operates in a manner that both reflects society or the public interest and for these reasons brings forward the following draft Law.

The proposed Gambling (Jersey) Law 201-

The current Law is prescriptive, but leaves swathes of detail to the Regulations. This has led to a situation whereby over time the Regulations have become overly complicated, disproportionate and inconsistent. The new draft Law takes a totally different approach to gambling activity in Jersey, being generally permissive, but with the majority of the detail of how the industry is to be controlled in the Law itself. Regulations may be made by the States for a number of purposes, most importantly to preclude the Commission from licensing particular types of gambling activity, but the Commission will always have to adhere to the structure mandated in the Law. This will mean that licensed activity, of whatever type, will be subject to a similar type of regime and will prevent the plethora of different forms, returns and conditions that currently make control of gambling unwieldy.

The proposal, therefore, is that gambling should no longer be considered unlawful as a general rule. Instead, the Law differentiates between different sorts of providers of gambling services, instead of different forms of gambling. Commercial gambling is defined as the commercial provision of gambling services to non-commercial gamblers, i.e. to customers. This type of gambling may only be provided under licence, with the Commission imposing conditions on the licences which may include compliance with codes of practice issued under the Gambling Commission (Jersey) Law 2010. The Commission must consult on and publish its policies on what commercial gambling will be licensed, and what conditions will normally be imposed on licences for different types of commercial gambling. This will provide for a much more uniform and efficient regulatory regime and follows the practice that the States has already endorsed in the Remote Gambling Regulations and the Gaming Machine Regulations. The Commission does not currently envisage broadening the scope of gambling in Jersey beyond that discussed during its public consultations held in 2008 and will not in any event seek to consult on changes prior to bedding down the application of the existing permitted activities into the new regime.

While the 1964 Law applied to all gambling, whether commercial, charitable or private, nothing in the draft Law applies to purely private gambling unless it is expressly made to do so. This has been a deliberate policy decision to reflect both the right to private life guaranteed under the Human Rights (Jersey) Law 2000, but also as an acknowledgement that the power of the state should be limited to activities that impact upon society as a whole. The framework of the 1964 Law is not in keeping with the modern age, and the Minister believes that Island residents should be able to gamble lawfully, in private, without authorisation from or oversight by, the States. In short, if individuals wish to play poker or other games together in their own home for money, the law should not seek to prevent them. This is an essential reform, for there has been no ability to police or enforce the current provisions and the Commission, now that it has been created as the supervisory authority, does not wish to do so. Individuals will have to use their own judgement about whether or not to gamble, in much the same way as they must make other life choices. This provision applies only to private gambling. As soon as incentives, advertising or charges are made, the activity becomes commercial (or social/charitable) and is captured.

The other major proposed change from the past is to make gambling contracts enforceable. Currently, gambling contracts are not enforceable, reflecting an age when it was considered an undesirable activity. Neither the Minister nor the Commission sees any convincing argument for maintaining this, given the norm of contract law and the realities of present day business. To enforce a gambling debt, a creditor must be able to prove that the debt exists and is legitimate. This will be a difficult test to prove for private individuals gambling amongst themselves, as it is unlikely that they will have written proof of contract. Licensed businesses, on the other hand, will be able to prove that a debt exists and submit an audit trail. It is difficult to see how the person who takes a risk on buying a commodity hoping the market will escalate is appreciably different from another who decides to back a horse. Both wager and risk in the hope of reward, but one can have the outcome enforced by a court while the other cannot. This does not make sense, and a level playing field between this type of business and others should be introduced. Two caveats are applied to this provision from the 1964 Law. The first is to prevent enforcement of the sale of goods by lottery (designed to protect customers buying a chance in good faith from having their prize returned should the donor renege or otherwise seek to gain purchase over their donation), while using securities to settle gambling debts is likewise prohibited. In this case, the objective is to stop the reckless use of a security directly in a wager, but a person is naturally still able to redeem the security in the normal manner as a source of funds, either to pay a debt or for any other purpose.

Although not considered gambling activity in the normal sense, the draft Law closes a potential loophole in Island legislation by expressly stating that chain-gift schemes are prohibited. This provision has been adopted after consultation with Trading Standards and is considered an important consumer protection.

Power to make Regulations

As noted above, the States can, by Regulations, prohibit the Commission from licensing specified types of commercial gambling, or allow it to do so only if it imposes specified conditions. Regulations can also require permits or approvals to be obtained for commercial provision of gambling services (ancillary services) to other commercial operators. The Commission intends to ask the States to use this power to bring forward an approval regime for companies that facilitate gambling by providing a service to operators, for example to regulate suppliers of software or gaming machines. This is an important and developing sector that needs to be captured so that the Commission can have sight of their activity, but in a manner that is not onerous or overly intrusive. For this reason, it was not considered appropriate to designate a full licensing system for these businesses (given that they do not interact directly with customers) as the ultimate sanction will always remain with the licensed operator that utilises their services.

The other main area where the Commission will ask the States to make Regulations is to govern the conduct of charitable and social gambling. The Commission wishes to see a clear difference between a full licensing regime that applies to the commercial sector and the charitable sector where gambling activity is undertaken for a social or charitable good, but not for profit. In this area, a more limited set of conditions will be requested, but the consistency applied to the commercial sector will also apply. This will mean that the current divergence between standards applied for example to Public Bingo or Private Bingo (both for charitable purposes), will be abolished and charities and membership clubs will have a similar set of conditions regardless of what type of gambling they wish to promote. This will make life easier for them because the current system is confusing, and there is no regulatory reason held by the Commission for maintaining a system of different standards and conditions. Charitable gambling does not, ordinarily pose significant risk to the public and many see it as a form of donation to a good cause. The Commission intends to use a risk-based approach to this type of activity, applying an increasing level of oversight as the amount of money generated by the activity increases.

It is also important at this point to note that sanctions are different for commercial operations and charitable activity. Although sanctions will be discussed later in this report, Members should note that commercial operations will be subject to a civil regime overseen by the Commission, whereas the charitable sector will be governed by criminal law. This means that charitable endeavours will be given a higher level of protection, as the burden of proof is set higher for criminal sanctions and prosecution is solely down to the Attorney General having applied the standard tests (evidential, proportionality and public interest). For civil breaches by licensed commercial operators in contrast, the Commission must be 'satisfied' that a breach has occurred.

Licensing process

Article 11 provides for applications to be made for licences for commercial gambling and confirms that the Commission can publish different forms and fees for applications for licences for different types of commercial gambling. Article 12 provides the minimum criteria that must be met for the grant of a licence and as with current regulations, an applicant must be a fit and proper person, and the Commission must consider the applicant's history and systems, and whether investigations should be made into principal persons of the applicant. This follows the approach already taken on remote gambling (Regulation 8(1C) of the Remote Gambling (Jersey) Regulations 2008) and before that on gaming machines (paragraph 6A(2) of the Schedule to the Gambling (Gaming and Lotteries) (Jersey) Regulations 1965).

In order to provide the consistency in licensing referred to earlier, Article 16 provides for mandatory conditions, to which all licences are subject. The Law reduces the current unhelpful level of bureaucracy by removing the requirement for multiple licences for the same type of gambling (such as operator, premises and personal licences), by allowing conditions of the same licence to cover any premises used and so on. Other mandatory conditions cover advertising to children, and compliance with data protection and anti-money-laundering laws, and with directions barring individuals from employment in gambling. The States can add further mandatory conditions by Regulations should the need arise.

Article 17 provides further mandatory conditions, to which all licences are subject, to enable the Commission to supervise the licensee effectively. The licensee must co-operate with routine examinations (some unannounced), including allowing Commission officers to enter and search the licensee's premises, and must answer questions and provide information and documents on request. They must also proactively provide information they know to be relevant if the Commission would otherwise be misled, as well as information about changes to company structure or problems with related gambling overseas. As will be explained in more depth, statements required under these powers cannot generally be used in criminal proceedings, but can be used as a basis for civil enforcement.

Flexibility in regulation is introduced through Article 20 that provides the list of topics for which there must be a condition imposed, but for which the Commission can choose the content of the condition (individually or as a standard condition). The main one is to specify the form of gambling (betting, gaming, lottery or any combination or subdivision of those) that is covered by the licence, but other compulsory topics include the appropriate restriction of involvement of children, regulation of advertising, maintenance of systems to protect and inform customers, and what equipment (including software) may be used and how it is tested.

Fees

The draft Law follows the model used by the Jersey Financial Services Commission (JFSC) so that fees can be set by the Commission and published after consultation. As with the JFSC, there is provision for an appeal to the Jurats if the proposed fee income appears greater than needed. This is a much-needed reform. The States has already provided adequate protection against an overzealous regulator by the duty in Article 3(5) of the Gambling Commission (Jersey) Law not to introduce ‘unnecessary burdens’ on the industry. Further protection is provided in Article 47 of the draft Law so that fees may only be charged to enable the Commission to carry out its functions under the Law and to provide a reserve. The Commission believe that it is in the best interests of its licensees that it should be able to set a level of fees after consultation and subject to an appeal if required. This is a pragmatic, expedient route, allowing for flexibility: new fees may be introduced, while existing fees may be reduced or abandoned. The current route is laborious and time-consuming, requiring Parliamentary debate, when the States have already approved this model for the JFSC and have mandated that the Commission should move towards self-funding.

Regulatory controls

The JGC has a duty under paragraph four of the Gambling Commission (Jersey) Law in the performance of all of its functions, to have regard to the principles that any gambling services provided –

- (a) should be conducted responsibly and with safeguards necessary to protect children and vulnerable people;
- (b) should be regulated in accordance with generally accepted international standards to prevent fraud and money laundering, and should not be permitted to be a source of crime; and
- (c) should be verifiably fair to consumers of those services.

To that end, the Commission has worked with the Department to ensure that the new Law contains sufficient enforcement powers to deliver on these responsibilities. As with fees, the Financial Services model has been taken as a benchmark. The Commission will, therefore, have a power to require licensees and persons suspected of unlawful gambling to provide information and answer questions, and it will be able to enter and search premises (routinely in the case of licensees, but under a court warrant in other cases). The power to require persons to answer questions and provide information is, however, strictly limited to civil matters and no one compelled to provide information could then have that used against them in any court. The Commission may, however, use such information or the refusal to provide such information, as pertinent to a licensing matter and take remedial action including suspension or revocation. The right to enter premises licensed for commercial gambling is also required in order to ensure that the Commission may properly supervise and regulate the industry that it licences. The current Law provides no right of entry, other than to a police officer, unless the person requiring entry has received an approval from the relevant Connétable. The Commission recognises the important role that a Connétable plays in Parish life, but considers that the right to inspect its own licensees should be independent of the need for any other permissions.

Sanctions

The draft Law also provides that the Commission can, without going to court (but subject to an appeal to the court), issue directions and revoke licences. The Commission can also apply to the court for injunctions, remedial orders and orders providing for intervention in a gambling business. It can exercise certain of these powers to assist an equivalent overseas regulator through reference to the assistance provisions included in the Commission Law. Again, these are proportionate and necessary powers for the regulator to assess the level of compliance with licensing conditions and codes of practice and enforce action before having to move to the 'nuclear option' of licence revocation. As previously noted, the Commission can enforce relevant standards through applying both standard and supplementary licensing conditions and linking them to published codes of practice. This follows established precedent in the field already approved by the States.

The new element that is a marked departure from the 1964 Law, is that the Commission will, if the Law is approved, be able to make licensees pay civil financial penalties for certain defaults, including breaches of licence conditions. There is an important distinction between criminal offences, which will still be prosecuted by the Law Officers in the normal way, and non-criminal breaches, which will be subject to civil financial penalties (as well as to revocation of licences and other civil enforcement). To provide an effective deterrent, the cap for civil financial penalties is set at twice the profit made by the breach (or £5,000 if higher), and the proceeds are reserved in the first instance to the Consolidated Fund, although the States will have the power to amend this by Regulation. The decision to require civil financial penalties is based on a number of factors. In order to remove the possibility of double jeopardy, the Department opted for a clear delineation between those matters that are to be considered as civil and those which will remain criminal. As noted at the beginning of this report, certain types of gambling will remain governed by the criminal code (social and charitable) in order to benefit from the enhanced protections afforded by the courts. The business sector, however, will move to a system of solely civil proceedings.

There is a balance to be struck in considering which criteria are best from a regulatory or business perspective. While the criminal system affords higher level tests with regard to assessing whether a breach has occurred, it can also be more protracted and costly. The civil scale may be swifter and less expensive, but does so by adopting a lower threshold of guilt than 'beyond reasonable doubt'. In this case, however, because licensed activity is clearly delineated as a civil matter, the Commission must have access to a system that will cause corrective behaviour other than purely having the right to remove a licence. A system of administrative fines is unlikely to be widely applied, given both a recognition of a largely compliant industry and the strong message that a system of fines gives out, but it must be included within the Commission's regulatory armoury so that it is taken seriously and can act in the unlikely event that other regulatory tools have failed. Although new to gambling regulation in Jersey, administrative fines are not an innovation and are widely used in other jurisdictions. It is well known that the JFSC and the JCRA are requesting fining powers for some infractions, and it could well be that the model for the use of penalties changes over time. For this reason, the draft Law arms the States with the ability to adapt by regulation both the application of fines and decide the fate of any monies accrued through levelling these penalties. As required in all modern legislation, appeals can be made to court against this and other forms of enforcement.

Social responsibility

Although the perception of gambling has changed over the past 50 years, and a view has been taken that it should be considered a reputable business, this is not to say that the Law or the Commission will be in any way permissive or lax. The contrary remains the case, for although the approach of the 1964 Law that all gambling is illegal will have been abandoned, there will be no automatic right to gamble, nor any requirement on the Commission to licence gambling activity if, in the Commission's opinion, it was not in the Island's interest. Article 6 of the draft Law provides that there is no general right to gamble, and this is an important protection for the Commission in exercising its duty to only permit those gambling activities for which it has undergone a public consultation exercise and which it considers will operate in compliance with its guiding principles.

Members will be mindful that there is a negative side to the gambling industry and that a small number of people gamble irresponsibly. To that end, it may surprise some that there is no overt reference to social responsibility in the new Gambling Law. This is because all of the necessary protections have already been incorporated and passed in the Gambling Commission (Jersey) Law 2010. The new draft Gambling Law essentially provides the regulatory powers that the Commission needs to oversee the industry and no extra protections for individuals are necessary over and above those already in place. It is important in this context to appreciate that most of the protections included within the 1964 Law have been retained (albeit in amended form) in the new draft. Aspects of the current Regulations that are used to distinguish credit betting, remote gambling, gaming with gaming machines, gaming ancillary to events, track betting and so on, will remain. Importantly, the means of distinguishing these types of gambling also include the age of persons involved, which means appropriate provision can be made for limiting young people's involvement in various forms of gambling.

The Commission has already made a commitment in its report on the future of gambling in the Island that it published in 2008 to limit the ability of young persons to gamble. That consultation provided a clear signal that the Island's population wished to retain the age of majority as being the age when participation in licensed gambling should be permitted, and the Commission will keep that as its norm until such time as the Island population, through consultation or its elected representatives should suggest otherwise. But that does not mean that children should not be able to gamble under any circumstances. A level of common sense that is not available within the rigid and inflexible 1960s regime will be introduced to show that while betting and gaming will not be accessible to children, social and charitable lotteries may be permissible with parental consent, as will Church and School tombolas which are currently legally ambiguous. The Commission is open to hear contrary views and is always ready to review its policies, but as a general rule it wishes to see a policy that empowers parents to make life choices for their children at home and at charity events, while ensuring that certain provisions currently available to children by way of business, such as low value gaming machines and Crown and Anchor are forbidden.

The Channel Islands Lottery

The Channel Islands (CI) Lottery operation is maintained as if made under this Law until such time as the Minister wishes to bring new Regulations before the States. The CI Lottery has consistently been treated differently to other types of gambling, reflecting the fact that it operates for the benefit of the public and not as a commercial business for private gain. While all other functions of the Minister with respect to gambling have been transferred to the Commission, new Regulations in this area may retain the functions of the Public Lotteries Board and the Minister and their control over the lottery, but equally they could be transferred to the Commission if this was deemed appropriate. The Commission believes that it should receive a clear authorisation to regulate operation of the CI Lottery in accordance with its guiding principles, but recognises that the circumstances of the lottery's operation mark it as a special case.

Financial and manpower implications

There are no direct financial or manpower implications for the States arising out of this draft Law. Funds raised from licence fees are already collected by the Commission as agent of the States and this Law will make de jure what already occurs de facto by giving the Commission power to raise its own fees in its own name. Indirectly, the ability to raise and keep fees will allow the Commission to move quickly to a position of financial self-sufficiency and thereby reduce if not eliminate any need for public funding.

Conclusion and Recommendation

The past 10 years have seen an incremental change to the way that gambling is licensed and regulated in Jersey, and this mirrors the changing view of gambling as an industry and how it is perceived on the Island. From considering modernisation in 2002 and the recommendations of the outgoing Gambling Control Committee, the States has consistently supported a process of widening opportunities for gambling related business, while increasing the oversight and enforcement powers of its regulatory supervisors. This has not been done in an idle way, but has required the support and intervention of a great many different parties, from the public and the industry through consultation on the one hand, to internal and external regulatory agencies and other departments of the States on the other. This draft Law has been well thought out; it is balanced and proportionate. It neither endorses proliferation of gambling services due to retaining that gambling is a privilege and not a right, but it also aims to treat all gambling services consistently by making good the Commission's statutory duty to reduce unnecessary burdens.

The new Law does not specifically refer to one type of gambling in one way and then another in a different way as is currently the case, but it will maintain the additional benefits already afforded by the modern regulations passed by the States in the past 2 years. Development of gambling services and particularly remote gambling still represent an enormous opportunity for industry by way of investment and upgrading of the Island's communications infrastructure. Encouraging that segment of the industry to move to Jersey will inevitably reduce the economic risk posed by the current fragile world climate, and will encourage other businesses and offer new and diverse employment opportunities. These are opportunities that the States has already approved and which the department alongside the Commission are driving forward. This new Law will remove the uncertainty faced by new businesses in trying to understand what the 1964 Law is seeking to achieve. This new Law will make the operation of charitable and social gambling simpler and less burdened by bureaucracy, but most importantly, this new Law will give the Jersey Gambling Commission the technical and regulatory tools to ensure that Jersey residents are properly protected and give the States the confidence that the Commission can be left to get on with the job.

European Convention on Human Rights

Article 16 of the Human Rights (Jersey) Law 2000 requires the Minister in charge of a Projet de Loi to make a statement about the compatibility of the provisions of the Projet with the Convention rights (as defined by Article 1 of the Law). On 3rd June 2011 the Chief Minister, for and on behalf of the Minister for Economic Development, made the following statement before Second Reading of this Projet in the States Assembly –

In the view of the Chief Minister, for and on behalf of the Minister for Economic Development, the provisions of the Draft Gambling (Jersey) Law 201- are compatible with the Convention Rights.

Explanatory Note

This Law replaces the Gambling (Jersey) Law 1964 (“the 1964 Law”), and the Regulations and Orders under that Law, with a new framework for the regulation of gambling. The 1964 Law outlaws all participation in all forms of gambling unless made lawful by Regulations, and the Regulations and Orders make detailed provision for different forms of gambling. The Jersey Gambling Commission (“the Commission”) has now taken on the functions formerly performed under the 1964 Law by the Minister for Economic Development.

Under this Law gambling as such is no longer unlawful. The Law primarily distinguishes between different sorts of providers of gambling services, instead of different forms of gambling. The main focus is on the commercial provision of gambling services to non-commercial gamblers (“customers”). Those services can only be provided under licence, with the Commission imposing conditions on the licences, backed up by codes of practice issued under the Gambling Commission (Jersey) Law 2010 (“the Commission Law”). The Commission must consult on and publish its policies on what commercial gambling will be licensed, and what conditions will normally be imposed on licences for different types of commercial gambling. The States can, by Regulations, prohibit the Commission from licensing specified types of commercial gambling, or allow it to do so only if it imposes specified conditions. Regulations can also require permits or approvals to be obtained for commercial provision of gambling services to other commercial operators, which could be used for example to regulate suppliers of software or gaming machines. Fees can be set by the Commission under powers similar to those of the Jersey Financial Services Commission, including provision for an appeal to the Jurats if the proposed fee income appears greater than needed.

Non-commercial gambling is dealt with separately, including charities, membership clubs, public lotteries and purely private gambling. Non-commercial providers of gambling services may be required, by Regulations, to obtain permits, approvals or registration. Nothing in the Law applies to purely private gambling unless it is expressly made to do so.

The Commission is given enforcement powers similar to those of the Jersey Financial Services Commission, subject to review by the Royal Court (“the Court”) in some cases before the event and in other cases after the event. So it can require licensees and persons suspected of unlawful gambling to provide information and answer questions, and it can enter and search premises (routinely in the case of licences, and under a Court warrant in other cases). The Commission can, without going to the Court (but subject to an appeal to the Court), issue directions and revoke licences. The Commission can also apply to the Court for injunctions, remedial orders and orders providing for intervention in a gambling business. It can exercise certain of these powers to assist an equivalent overseas regulator. The new element is that the Commission can make licensees pay civil financial penalties for certain defaults, including breaches of licence conditions. There is a distinction between criminal offences, which will still be prosecuted by the Law Officers in the normal way, and non-criminal breaches which will be subject to civil financial penalties (as well as to revocation of licences and other civil enforcement). To provide an effective deterrent the cap for civil financial penalties is set at twice the profit made by the breach (or £5,000 if higher). Appeals can be made to the Court against this and other forms of enforcement. The proceeds of these penalties go to the States' consolidated fund, unless Regulations provide for some different treatment.

Gambling contracts are made enforceable, but sales by lottery and certain gambling-related securities remain void. The offence of cheating is updated and chain-gift schemes are prohibited.

Part 1 deals with the interpretation and application of the Law.

Article 1 is the interpretation provision. Gambling is still defined as including all forms of betting, gaming and lottery (as in the 1964 Law), but the Law still does not attempt comprehensive definitions of these terms, which continue to be for the courts to decide on their ordinary meaning unless defined by Regulations. As gambling itself is no longer to be an offence, and as one system of licensing will be adapted to all forms of commercial gambling, less will now hang on the meaning of these terms.

Article 2 defines the core concept of a gambling service. It is either gambling with someone under arrangements made by the provider of the service (as in bookmaking, or the "house" in gaming), or facilitating someone else's gambling (as in services that introduce people seeking to bet with each other). The States can use Regulations, if needed, to place activities within or outside the definition of facilitating gambling. A person "conducts" gambling if they provide a gambling service in relation to it (so there can be more than one person "conducting" the same gambling, if they provide different services). The Law mainly regulates provision of gambling services, rather than simply gambling as such.

Article 3 sets out the various ways in which types of gambling (and so types of service and licence) can be distinguished from each other in the Commission's policies and standard licence conditions, and in Regulations if necessary. These include distinguishing by the forms of gambling mentioned above (and their subdivisions and combinations), but also by other aspects such as are currently used to distinguish credit betting, remote gambling, gaming with gaming machines, gaming ancillary to events, track betting and so on. The means of distinguishing also include the age of persons involved, which means appropriate provision can be made for limiting young people's involvement in various forms of gambling.

Article 4 provides definitions of a principal person, and an associate, which are particularly relevant to a fully informed view of whether an applicant for a licence is a "fit and proper person". The definitions are similar to those in financial services legislation, but also include someone who appears able to influence the licensee or the outcome of the gambling (such as a croupier or dealer).

Article 5 excludes from the scope of the Law any private gambling (unless expressly included), and disposals by lot under a legal requirement. It also excludes "exempt finance business", which is intended to ensure that the Jersey Financial Services Commission retains sole responsibility for activities that are financial rather than gambling as such (there is a power to amend the definition by Order to ensure the line remains correctly drawn).

Article 6 makes express the important principle that, despite gambling itself ceasing to be an offence, and private gambling being generally free of regulation, there remains no general right to gamble. So an individual gambler cannot demand a service from a provider, but nor can a provider demand a licence from the Commission. This is reflected in the fact that there are grounds on which a licence cannot be granted, but no exhaustive list of grounds on which a licence can be refused. The Commission is separately obliged under Article 4 of the Commission Law to follow the guiding principles that gambling should be conducted with safeguards for the young and vulnerable, so as to avoid money laundering and other crime, and with fairness to customers.

Part 2 deals with commercial gambling, as the main focus of regulation under the Law.

Article 7 defines commercial gambling as where a gambling service is provided by at least one person by way of business, to at least one person who gambles as a customer (not by way of business), a concept adapted from consumer legislation. This is later distinguished from an ancillary service, where a gambling service is provided by way of business, but only to others who are also acting by way of business (see Article 23). It is further distinguished from private gambling, where none of the participants gambles by way of business (and certain other conditions are met, see Article 28).

Article 8 provides the core prohibition of providing a commercial gambling service from Jersey without a licence (similar to prohibitions of providing financial services without registration in other legislation). Regulations can exempt certain commercial gambling services, and amend the rules for what counts as provision from Jersey (particularly for remote gambling). Breach of the prohibition is an offence carrying a maximum of 5 years imprisonment and an unlimited fine. This is the highest in the Law, jointly with the offences of giving false information (Article 34) and cheating (Article 51), and marks a significant increase on the current 12 months maximum imprisonment for unlawful gambling (but is the same as the current penalty for cheating).

Article 9 requires the Commission to consult on and publish its policies on what types of commercial gambling will be licensed, and what standard conditions will normally be imposed on licences for different types of commercial gambling. This follows the approach already taken on remote gambling (see Regulation 8(1C) of the Gambling (Remote Gambling) (Jersey) Regulations 2008, as amended) and before that on gaming machines (see paragraph 6A(2) of the Schedule to the Gambling (Gaming and Lotteries) (Jersey) Regulations 1965, as amended).

Article 10 allows the States, by Regulations, to prohibit the Commission from licensing any type of commercial gambling specified in the Regulations. Regulations can also allow the Commission to grant a licence only if it imposes specified conditions, or can provide that a type of gambling is prohibited unless expressly allowed. There is no right to be licensed to conduct any particular form of gambling, but the Commission's policy will be general, so the Regulation-making power could be used if the States wish there to be no exceptions to a bar on a particular type of gambling.

Article 11 provides for applications to be made for licences for commercial gambling. The Commission can publish different forms and fees for applications for licences for different types of commercial gambling.

Article 12 provides the minimum criteria that must be met for the grant of a licence (there is no entitlement to insist on a licence – see Article 6). The applicant must be a fit and proper person to hold a licence, and the Commission must consider the applicant's history and systems, and whether investigations should be made into principal persons of the applicant.

Article 13 provides for charging first stage fees for different types of application (levels of fees are set under Articles 48 and 49). It also allows for further fees to be charged if the first stage fee does not cover the costs of investigation of the application. Where the application is for a renewal this must be taken into account in determining whether a reduced fee should be paid.

Article 14 provides for grant or refusal of a licence. Licences last for 5 years, unless the Commission specifies a shorter period under its published policy.

Article 15 provides that licences are subject to conditions, including the mandatory conditions automatically imposed by this Law, and whatever supplementary conditions are imposed by the Commission.

Article 16 provides for mandatory conditions, to which all licences are subject. The Law avoids automatically requiring multiple licences for the same gambling (such as operator, premises and personal licences), by allowing conditions of the same licence to cover any premises used and so on (these ancillary services can additionally be covered directly by Regulations under Article 24). Other mandatory conditions cover advertising to children, and compliance with data protection and money-laundering laws, and with directions barring individuals from employment in gambling. The States can add further mandatory conditions by Regulations.

Article 17 provides for further mandatory conditions, to which all licences are subject, to enable the Commission to supervise the licensee effectively. The licensee must cooperate with routine examinations (some unannounced), including allowing Commission officers to enter and search the licensee's premises, and must answer questions and provide information and documents on request. They must also proactively provide information they know to be relevant if the Commission would otherwise be misled, as well as information about changes to company structure or problems with related gambling overseas. Statements required under these powers cannot generally be used in criminal proceedings, but can be used as a basis for other enforcement such as imposition of civil financial penalties.

Article 18 provides for supplementary conditions which the Commission imposes on a licence. The Commission must publish standard supplementary conditions for particular types of licence, and impose them in appropriate cases. There is also a list of topics for which there must be a condition imposed, but for which the Commission can choose the content of the condition (individually or as a standard condition). Otherwise the Commission is free to decide whether to impose further conditions appropriate to the type of gambling service and promoting the guiding principles under the Commission Law.

Article 19 provides for standard supplementary conditions (as currently provided for in relation to gaming machine licences and remote gambling licences). These must be published, along with the policy on the types of licences on which they will be imposed, which must link to the published policy on which types of licences may be granted.

Article 20 provides the list of topics for which there must be a condition imposed, but for which the Commission can choose the content of the condition (individually or as a standard condition). The main one will be to specify the form of gambling (betting, gaming, lottery or any combination or subdivision of those) that is covered by the licence, as any form can be covered but the licence must show which one is. Other compulsory topics include the appropriate restriction of involvement of children, regulation of advertising, maintenance of systems to protect and inform customers, and what equipment (including software) may be used and how it is tested.

Article 21 provides a non-exhaustive list of additional topics on which the Commission may impose conditions if it so chooses, including restrictions on choice of equipment suppliers (but the restriction applies to the licensee – see Article 24 for the power to require ancillary providers to obtain their own permits).

Article 22 provides for annual fees to be charged during the life of different types of licence, with the licence automatically revoked for non-payment. Fee structures can be made appropriate to the type of licence, so there can be simple flat rate fees for some types and banded scales of fees based on gambling yield for other types (as currently for remote gambling fees). In either case the levels of fees are subject to the procedures in Article 47, so that they cannot be set to make a profit.

Part 3 deals with types of gambling other than commercial gambling services provided to non-business customers. In these cases the starting point is that people are free to gamble and provide services except so far as the States enact Regulations providing otherwise.

Article 23 defines ancillary services as gambling services that are provided by way of business, but only to other businesses (which, if they are licensed commercial operators, may then pass the services on to their non-business customers). This would include providers of gambling equipment and software, specialist gambling hosting services, and those whose business is to provide premises for other gambling businesses. Regulations can designate additional forms of ancillary service.

Article 24 allows the States, by Regulations, to prohibit the provision of types of ancillary service or require providers to obtain a permit or approval from the Commission. The wide definition of type in Article 3 means that Regulations could prohibit, or require a permit or approval for, an entire form of ancillary service or just the provision of that service in particular circumstances. An approval scheme just allows the Commission to monitor activity, to revoke approval if something goes wrong, and to charge fees for administering the scheme. A permit scheme can additionally be given some or all of the features of the licensing scheme, as appropriate.

Article 25 defines charitable and membership gambling services, in both cases to exclude commercial gambling services. Charitable gambling services are those provided to raise charitable funds, while membership services are those provided by membership groups to members (not for profit, so generally for entertainment). Other related services can be designated as charitable or membership services by Regulations.

Article 26 provides that charitable and membership gambling services can be restricted, in similar ways to ancillary services, by Regulations prohibiting types of such service or requiring providers to obtain permits from or be registered with the Commission. A registration scheme (similarly as with approvals for ancillary services) allows the Commission to monitor activity, to revoke registration if something goes wrong, and to charge fees for administering the scheme. A permit scheme is similar to a permit scheme for ancillary services, in that the Regulations can additionally give it some or all of the features of the licensing scheme, as appropriate.

Article 27 provides for public lotteries. Initially it continues the existing Channel Islands lottery legislation in force as if made under this Law. But it allows that to be replaced by fresh Regulations under this Law, which can make similar provision. In particular any new Regulations could give to others any functions that otherwise fall to the Commission under this Law, so the Public Lotteries Board and the Minister could retain control over the lottery (when the Commission was set up it took on the Minister's functions in relation to gambling, apart from the Channel Islands Lottery functions).

Article 28 defines private gambling as gambling by adults (or by children with permission) which is not advertised nor carried on in public and for which no gambling service is provided by anybody. It also ensures the States can by Regulations prohibit or require registration for any other type of gambling that is not private.

Article 29 regulates some aspects of advertising. It should be read together with the Commission's powers to use licence conditions to regulate advertising of commercial gambling (see Articles 16 and 20), and to use directions to restrict the use of any advertisement (see Article 35). It defines advertising and provides defences for those innocently involved, based on similar provisions in the current law.

Part 4 deals with investigation and enforcement, making provision similar to the equivalents in financial services legislation. Some powers are only available if the Commission applies to the Court, and the exercise of the other powers can be appealed to the Court.

Articles 30 to 32 allow the Commission to serve notices (similar to equivalents in financial services legislation) requiring information, documents, inspection of equipment, answers to questions or entry to premises. It is an offence to fail to comply. But a licensee does not commit the offences as they will be governed instead by licence conditions making similar or more extensive provision (civil financial penalties are available for breach of conditions).

Article 33 provides for the Bailiff to grant entry and search warrants where entry has been denied, notices are not or would not be effective, or a direction has been contravened.

Article 34 provides offences of providing false information.

Articles 35 to 40 provide a range of steps that may be taken to enforce compliance with the Law.

Article 35 allows the Commission to issue directions (similar to equivalents in financial services legislation). In particular they can be used to direct an individual not to work in gambling services (it is then a condition of a licence that the licensee should not employ them), and to impose restrictions on advertisements.

Article 36 allows the Commission to apply to the Court for injunctions or remedial orders.

Article 37 allows the Commission to apply to the Court for orders intervening in the running of a gambling business where needed.

Article 38 allows the Commission to revoke a licence in certain circumstances. Revocation may be postponed and appeals may be brought under Articles 44 and 45.

Article 39 introduces a new scheme of civil financial penalties. The Commission can, in response to a breach of a licence condition or information notice, and after serving a warning notice and considering representations, require a licensee to pay a penalty of up to £5,000 or twice the profit made by the breach. The Commission must be satisfied beyond reasonable doubt that the breach occurred and the penalty must be justified by the breach (taking into account whether it has been remedied, how serious it was and so on). The money paid is handed over by the Commission to the States' consolidated fund. But the States can make Regulations amending certain aspects of the scheme, including allowing the proceeds to be paid for other purposes if no improper incentive will be created for the Commission to use the power as a means of generating income for itself instead of as a means of enforcing the Law. For example Regulations could be used to allow the Commission to use the proceeds only for its enforcement expenses or its social responsibility function, or to reduce fees payable by licensees that comply with their obligations.

Article 40 allows the Commission to use some of its investigation and enforcement powers in Jersey to co-operate with an overseas gambling regulator or equivalent.

Part 5 makes provision for various miscellaneous matters.

Article 41 makes it an offence to disclose information about a person's business or other affairs if the information was received under the Law.

Article 42 provides exceptions where information can be disclosed without committing the offence, for purposes connected with enforcement of the Law.

Article 43 requires the Commission to give notification of certain decisions, with reasons and other information.

Article 44 postpones for one month the variation of a condition, the revocation of a licence, or barring of an individual from posts with a licensee. In urgent cases the Commission can apply to the Court to reduce or remove the postponement.

Article 45 provides for appeals against Commission decisions on the ground that the decision was unreasonable in all the circumstances. The Court can confirm, reverse or vary the decision.

Article 46 allows the Commission to determine and publish fees. The fees can be flat rate or based on time spent (or on gambling yield in the case of annual fees for licences – see Article 22), can include late fees, and can vary by type of gambling or other circumstance.

Article 47 allows the Commission to set the levels of fees itself, but (as with fees set by the Jersey Financial Services Commission) provides that the levels must be set so that the fee income (taken with other resources) enables the Commission to fund its functions and provide a reserve, but not a profit. It requires consultation on increases, and allows representative bodies to have increases independently reviewed by Jurats.

Article 48 alters the current law so that gambling contracts become enforceable (but see Articles 36 and 37 under which the Court can make orders to undo the results of illegal gambling). However, Articles 49 and 50 continue the current rules that sales by lottery and securities related to gambling are void.

Article 51 modernises the current offence of cheating at gambling. The offence applies to anyone who cheats or assists in cheating, including customers and gambling service providers, and to private gambling.

Article 52 prohibits "chain-gift" schemes. These are not gambling, but are related. People pay a fee to join in the hope of recouping the fee, and making a profit, by persuading others to join and pay fees. It is an offence, punishable with up to one year's imprisonment and a fine of up to level 4 on the standard scale (currently £5,000), to promote a scheme or invite others to join it.

Article 53 makes standard provision for criminal liability of those responsible for offences by corporate bodies and limited liability partnerships.

Part 6 deals with how the new Law is brought into effect.

Article 54 repeals the existing gambling legislation, updates references to gambling law in other legislation, and allows other consequential amendments to be made by Regulations.

Article 55 provides transitional provisions. The Commission cannot licence any new forms of gambling until it publishes its policy on which forms it will licence under the new scheme and publishes the standard supplementary conditions (see also Article 27 which preserves the existing Channel Islands Lottery legislation until new Regulations are made). Licences or other authorities held under the existing Law immediately before commencement of this Law will be preserved as if granted under this Law for one year (or until they would expire if sooner).

Article 56 makes general provision about Orders and Regulations.

Article 57 provides the name of the Law and for it to come into force by Appointed Day Act.

- (i) gambling with that other person, in accordance with arrangements made by the person providing the service, or
 - (ii) facilitating gambling by that other person.
 - (2) A person facilitates gambling by another person if the person –
 - (a) provides, operates or administers arrangements for that other person's gambling; or

 - (b) whether any other person conducting the gambling does so as a commercial operator or otherwise.

3 Types of gambling

- (1) A reference in this Law to a type of gambling is to a type distinguished by reference to any aspect of the gambling or its conduct.
- (2) The aspects by reference to which a type of gambling may be distinguished from another type include –

 - (d) insurance business for the purposes of the Insurance Business (Jersey) Law 1996⁷;
 - (e) the use or proposed use of chance to select particular securities for special benefits, if –

- (5) Nothing in this Law applies to the disposal by lot of any land, goods or other thing whatsoever under and in accordance with the law, whether customary or enacted, of Jersey.

6 No general right to gamble

Nothing in this Law is to be construed as requiring, and no enactment under this Law may require –

- (a) the Commission to grant a licence, permit, approval, or registration for any particular type of gambling or to any particular applicant or to an applicant of any particular description; or
- (b) a person to provide a gambling service to any particular person.

PART 2

COMMERCIAL GAMBLING SERVICES

7 Interpretation: commercial gambling

- (1) For the purposes of this Law –
 - (a) a commercial gambling service is a gambling service that –
 - (i) is provided by way of business, and
 - (ii) is provided to a person who gambles otherwise than by way of business;
 - (b) a commercial operator is a person who –
 - (i) provides a commercial gambling service, or
 - (ii) holds himself, herself or itself out as providing or as offering to provide such a service;
 - (c) a customer is a person –
 - (i) who gambles otherwise than by way of business, and
 - (ii) to whom a commercial gambling service is provided in relation to that gambling; and
 - (d) gambling is commercial gambling if at least one of the persons who gambles does so as a customer of a commercial operator.
- (2) For the purpose of paragraph (1), it is irrelevant –
 - (a) whether there are other persons who gamble in addition to the customer, and whether they do so as customers or otherwise; and
 - (b) whether there are other persons who provide a gambling service in relation to the gambling, and whether they do so as commercial operators or otherwise.

8 Prohibition of unlicensed provision of commercial gambling services

- (1) Unless a person holds for the time being a licence granted under this Part, that person must not –
 - (a) provide a commercial gambling service in or from within Jersey;
 - (b) hold himself, herself or itself out as providing a commercial gambling service in or from within Jersey;
 - (c) being a body incorporated in Jersey, provide a commercial gambling service in any part of the world; or
 - (d) being a body incorporated in Jersey, hold himself, herself or itself out as providing a commercial gambling service in any part of the world.
- (2) The States may by Regulations –
 - (a) prescribe circumstances in which, and restrictions subject to which, paragraph (1) does not apply to the provision of a type of commercial gambling service;

- (b) prescribe circumstances in which the provision of a type of gambling service is to be treated as being, or not being, in or from within Jersey.
- (3) A person who contravenes this Article is guilty of an offence and liable to imprisonment for a term of 5 years and to a fine.

9 Commission policy

- (1) The Commission must prepare a statement setting out the Commission's policy as to the circumstances in which, and the types of gambling for which, it will generally (and subject to Articles 6 and 10) grant or refuse an application for a licence.
- (2) The statement must also –
 - (a) indicate when standard supplementary conditions will be imposed on a licence, either by setting out details in the statement or by giving information as to the publication of those details in the document publishing the standard supplementary conditions under Article 19; and
 - (b) set out the Commission's policy as to the circumstances in which, and the types of gambling for which, if it grants a licence, it will generally specify in the licence an expiry date of less than 5 years under Article 14(2)(b).
- (3) Before preparing a statement, or making a significant revision of a statement under paragraph (4)(b), the Commission must consult the Minister, licensees and such other persons as the Commission thinks appropriate.
- (4) The Commission must –
 - (a) review the statement from time to time;

- (2) If, on an application made under paragraph (1), the Court is satisfied that a person, by entering into any transaction, has contravened any of Articles 8, 24, 26 and 28 the Court may order that person and any other person who appears to the Court to have been knowingly concerned in the contravention to take such steps as the Court may direct for restoring the parties to the position in which they were before the transaction was entered into.

- (f) the continued conduct of gambling under the licence threatens to harm the reputation and integrity of Jersey in gambling matters, or in commercial and financial matters as those are affected by commercial gambling.

39 Civil financial penalties

- (1) If the Commission has reason to believe that a licensee has contravened a relevant provision, the Commission may serve on that licensee a notice (a “notice of intent”) informing the licensee –
 - (a) that the Commission proposes to require the licensee to pay a penalty;
 - (b) of the amount of the proposed penalty;
 - (c) of the Commission’s reasons for believing that the licensee has contravened the relevant provision and that a penalty should be imposed; and

- (2) A relevant provision is any one or more of the following –

 - (b) if later, the day on which the contravention came to the knowledge of the Commission.
- (4) After considering any representations made within the period specified under paragraph (1)(d), the Commission may serve on the licensee a notice (a “final notice”) requiring the licensee to pay a penalty, as proposed in the notice of intent or as modified in light of any representations, if the Commission –

- (a) is satisfied that the licensee contravened the relevant provision; and
 - (b) is satisfied that the contravention justifies the imposition of the penalty on the licensee, taking into account any other power the Commission could exercise under this Part in relation to the contravention.
- (5) A final notice must include information as to –
- (a) the reasons for imposing the penalty;
 - (b) the licensee’s right of appeal against the imposition or amount of the penalty under Article 45;

 - (e) the nature of the licensee, including in particular the financial resources of the licensee; and
 - (f) the aim of ensuring that licensees generally cannot expect to profit from contraventions.
- (7) A penalty imposed by a final notice –

 - (9) Before preparing or revising a statement under paragraph (8) the Commission must consult the Minister, licensees and such other persons as the Commission thinks appropriate.
 - (10) Without prejudice to the generality of the Commission's powers under this Article, the principles referred to in paragraph (8)(a) may include a principle that the Commission will impose penalties of specified standard amounts, not exceeding £5,000, for specified types of contraventions or for contraventions in specified circumstances, unless there are exceptional reasons to impose a lower or higher amount.
 - (11) The amount of a penalty imposed by the Commission may not exceed whichever is the higher of –
 - (a) £5,000; and
 - (b) twice the gross win attributable to the contravention of the relevant provision.
 - (12) The Commission must determine, and set out in the statement published under paragraph (8), the manner in which the gross win is to be calculated for the purposes of paragraph (11)(b), including the principles under which the gross win is to be identified as attributable to a contravention of a relevant provision.
 - (13) Paragraph (14) applies if –

 - (b) the Minister has given specific directions under Article 5(2) of that Law.
 - (14) The Commission must, in making a determination under paragraph (12), take account of the need to avoid unnecessary inconsistency between the manner in which the gross win is to be calculated in any year for the purposes of this Article and for the purposes of the social responsibility levy.
 - (15) The States may by Regulations –
 - (a) amend paragraph (7)(c) to provide that, on receipt by the Commission the whole or part of a penalty is not to be paid into the consolidated fund, but is instead to be retained by the Commission, or paid by the Commission to any other person or for any other purpose;

- (17) Regulations under paragraph (15)(a) may, in particular and without limiting the generality of that sub-paragraph or paragraph (16), provide that the amount not paid into the consolidated fund –
- (a) is to be retained by the Commission, but is only to be used to fund a reduction in, or a refund of, fees otherwise payable to the Commission in a particular year, whether in respect of all such fees or only certain fees, such as fees paid by licensees achieving in that year any standards determined by the Commission or complying throughout that year with all relevant requirements of and under this Law and the Commission Law;
 - (b) is to be calculated by reference to the costs of investigation and enforcement action in relation to the particular penalty or in general, and is to be retained by the Commission; or
 - (c) is to be paid into a fund, to be established and held by the Commission, from which payments may only be made for specified purposes or in specified circumstances, such as –
