

Dear Sir/Madam,

As a Design and Technology student, I am constantly looking around to identify how the collection, management and use of plastics is completed. The elimination of the use of plastic cups at Waitrose for coffee is a notable example of success, alongside of McDonalds which is currently attempting to reduce the amount of its plastic straws: however these are all completed by large scale corporations. Aside from the large recycling centre at La Colette and other centres scattered around the parishes, I believe that the government could assist more with independent businesses and the public on how they manage plastic.

Kind Regards,

Edouard
